

Shattering the Stereotype

Joseph Earl Callura, CA, is a sole practitioner operating a successful practice in Hamilton, Ontario. He articulated from 1972 to 1976 with the Hamilton office of Clarkson Gordon. His greatest pet peeve has always been the stereotyping of accountants. "We are always portrayed as four-eyed introverts and social nerds. In true life such is not the case. We are talented businessmen who are, in many cases, better in business promotion than most others. We have to gain the utmost confidence and respect of our clients before they will entrust us with the handling of their business affairs. Accordingly, I have spent the majority of my life trying to shatter our false public image."

IT'S NOT UNUSUAL TO BE LOVED BY EVERYONE.

Joe could be seen performing his "Tom Jones" act in the lounge of the Aladdin hotel in Las Vegas in December 1994. Joe has been singing semi-professionally since he was a child, and performed in nightclubs during his McMaster years to put himself through school. He still finds time amid his demanding practice for a periodic performance.

Congratulations Joe. You certainly seem to have been successful in shattering the stereotype! – The Editor.
